I am running for Assembly because I believe that every Californian deserves universal healthcare, affordable housing, and justice. That's not a slogan. Those are my core values. I was raised in a union-household by parents whose families emigrated from Mexico. My parents taught me to respond to hard times with a love for family, community, and a passion for social justice. From serving as President of Lavender Seniors of the East Bay to holding elected office, I have worked to lift up those in need. As San Leandro's first openly gay Vice-Mayor, I have championed progressive policies that make a lasting difference in people's lives, from hazard pay for grocery workers to rent stabilization and civilian police oversight. The pandemic has personally affected us all. My family are frontline workers. I lost my loving mother to COVID-19. Her hospital bills were over $800,000. Without medical coverage from her union job, my father would have not only lost his wife, but he would've been financially devastated. To me, it's simple. California's response to COVID-19 would have been different if the profit motive was removed from our healthcare system. I will fight tirelessly for universal single payer healthcare. I will champion affordable housing. I will be a voice for racial, economic and environmental justice. My values are consistent.
